REDESIGNING SCOTTISH WORKPLACES FOR A POST-COVID WORLD

A line manager’s guide to creating and leading flexible teams
Covid-19 has ripped up the rulebook on what normal work looks like. Whole organisations and sectors, including those previously resistant to flexible working, are now taking part in a global remote working experiment. And while the circumstances are unusual (such as employees having to homeschool their children), the outlook is a positive one.

All the evidence suggests that leaders are increasingly of the view that giving employees greater control over how they work can benefit everyone involved. And employees are grasping the opportunity to prove that flexibility and productivity can be achieved together.

There is a great deal of speculation about what the world of work will look like when the Covid-19 era is over. But one thing seems clear: it won’t be the same as before. Even with social distancing measures starting to be relaxed, people will still need to work from home and stagger working hours to reduce pressure on public transport. And employees are likely to be unwilling to accept a full-scale return to the traditional office-based 9-5.

At Timewise we believe this challenging time offers a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for leaders and managers to transform the way their teams work. We’ve created this line manager’s guide to help you think through the short- and long-term implications of becoming more flexible, and put structures and processes in place to deliver future-fit workplaces.

It is designed to work with your own organisational policy on flexible working. You may want to review this before you get started, so you are clear on what flexible working you can support.
1. The business case for flexible working

It’s worth noting that flexible working is so much more than a perk for employees. Correctly implemented, it can help solve a number of core business issues, including:

TALENT ATTRACTION

87% of people either work flexibly already, or wish they could. 92% of millennials identify flexibility as a top priority.

RETENTION AND MOTIVATION

75% of employers say that flexible working has a positive effect on retention and 73% say it improves staff motivation.

INCLUSION AND DIVERSITY

Gender-diverse companies are 15% more likely to achieve financial returns above their industry average.

PERFORMANCE

97% of managers said the quantity of work improved or stayed the same, and 93% said the same about work quality.

BUSINESS COSTS

Reducing office space through flexibility has contributed to global savings of £15 million a year for EY.

The challenge is to make sure that the measures you take are implemented correctly, to support sustainable flexible working. That means designing your roles to fit the specific working patterns that people want or need.

Many flexible working arrangements can be agreed informally, between you and a team member. However, if an individual wants to reduce or compress their hours, in the short or long term, you will need to speak to your HR team as this will require a contract change and affect the payroll.
2. Understanding flexible job design

At the heart of the job design process is one key principle: finding a working pattern that works for both the organisation and the individual.

You therefore need to explore what your employee needs, and what the business needs and identify where they can both be met.

Having worked out where both parties’ needs overlap, there are three core elements you need to explore further:

• WHERE the work needs to be done
• WHEN the work needs to be done
• HOW MUCH work is involved

We will cover each of these points individually in the next few sections.

To find out about our job design workshops email info@timewise.co.uk
3. WHERE people work: making a success of remote working

DEFINITION
Across Scotland during lockdown, remote working – or more specifically, working from home – became the norm for many people. And although it is an ever-changing situation, at the time of writing, the advice remains that everyone who can work from home should do so. It is likely that this will continue in some form in the months ahead.

The way we are working right now is not representative of normal remote working. In more usual circumstances, it tends to only form part of an employee’s working week, and incorporates working at other offices, sites or cafes as well as from home. But it is nonetheless giving us a useful introduction to remote working principles and practices.

THINKING THROUGH THE SHORT TERM
In the short term, you need to make sure you’re having the right conversations, and asking the right questions, to support your team to work safely and effectively from home.

The Ways of Working Checklist in Section 4 will help guide your conversations and make sure you cover all the essential points.

PLANNING FOR THE LONGER TERM
It’s highly likely that members of your team will want to continue with some degree of remote working, even if your workplace fully reopens in the future. Here are some questions to consider to make sure it is sustainable.

- Where will the majority of your business be conducted going forward? Are you considering down-sizing or closing down office spaces?
- Has the current experience changed how you think about productivity? Can you shift your focus from hours of work to contribution, results and output?
- How will you ensure everyone is connected and engaged if people continue to work remotely? What practices have you adopted during lockdown which support team cohesion?
- What interventions can you design to ensure ongoing collaboration and long-term shared goals?
- How can you ensure regular feedback and improvement focus, about performance and ways of working?

To find out about our line manager workshops email info@timewise.co.uk

From crisis to opportunity: redesigning the workplace
4. Line Manager Tool: Ways of Working Checklist

Right now, it’s critical that you are making positive connections with everyone in your team to support their well-being and ways of working. This checklist of questions to ask your team members will help you have the right conversations during this time.

PERFORMANCE EXPECTATIONS

Are you clear on priorities and upcoming deadlines?
Are these achievable given the current constraints?
Do we need to adjust these or do you need additional support?
Do you have any caring / child care responsibilities you need to work around?
Would it help to adjust your working hours to accommodate these?

HEALTH AND WELL-BEING

Are you looking after yourself, taking regular breaks and moving around?
When are you most productive during the day?
Do we need to make any adjustments to incorporate this?
Are you comfortable with this way of working for the foreseeable future or do you have any concerns?

COLLABORATION AND ENGAGEMENT

Do you feel you have enough opportunities to communicate with me and your colleagues?
Is there anything we could do to keep you better connected as a team?

TOOLS AND TECHNOLOGY

Do you have the right equipment to perform your role effectively?
Do you have a quiet workspace, free from distractions?
Do you have reliable internet connection and phone signal?
What else, if anything, could the business provide to help you work more effectively?
Are you comfortable with the new tools we are using, or do you need additional support or training?

CAPTURING THE LEARNING

Is there anything I, the team or the business could be doing to support you better right now?
Do you have any concerns about the current situation, either personally or about the organisation in general?
5. WHEN people work: finding the right pattern

DEFINITION
When-based flexibility refers to patterns in which the working day, week or year is adjusted. This includes patterns such as flexitime, compressed hours and annualised hours.

THINKING THROUGH THE SHORT TERM
During the initial lockdown period, workers across Scotland were forced to flex their working day to accommodate homeschooling children or caring for others; and any further school closures or local measures would lead to a similar clash of responsibilities.

Again, this isn’t representative of how people usually manage their time. It is therefore in your interests to ensure your team members have enough flexibility around their working hours to make their other responsibilities achievable. If you trust them to do so, you will find they repay that trust.

Working patterns during this time may include: working in shorter ‘sprints’ across the day or evening rather than long blocks; ringfencing blocks of time when they aren’t working; using time at the weekend to catch up.

You can help individuals balance their work and personal needs by clearly defining your expectations and any fixed commitments for each role. These are the points to consider:

- What are the expectations of your stakeholders / clients right now?
- What turnaround do you expect on tasks? Can you be explicit on this when setting work?
- Are there any important deadlines to be met?
- Are there key meetings during the week that should be attended?
- Can anyone else provide cover if the individual is unavailable at certain times?

You will also need to understand the scope and timings of each individual’s current non-work commitments, and keep working arrangements under review as the situation changes.

Finally, make sure your team members are building in some downtime, and that your expectations are realistic. There is a real danger that people with a lot to juggle will become overwhelmed by their responsibilities, leaving little time for anything else. This isn’t sustainable in terms of people’s physical and mental wellbeing.

PLANNING FOR THE LONGER TERM
Transport Scotland is currently advising people who do need to travel to avoid peak times. And even when workplaces start to reopen, it is likely that this advice will continue, along with the guidance to homework where possible. So your team is unlikely to return to a traditional 9-5 any time soon. Again, understanding the work demands can help you define a sustainable framework:

- What are the needs of your clients and stakeholders in terms of response times?
- Are there core times when people need to attend key meetings or service clients?
- How often will your team come together?
- Are you using tech to make sure people can get up to speed when they start their day?
- Will you need to make any further changes to manage different working patterns?

To find out more about our flexible working workshops email info@timewise.co.uk
6. HOW MUCH people work: exploring part-time options

DEFINITION
There are many different ways to work part-time, including working fewer days, shorter days, term-time only, job sharing and job splitting. However, doing part-time well requires careful job design. The key, once again, is to find a working pattern which will work for both the organisation and the individual.

THINKING THROUGH THE SHORT TERM
There are a few scenarios for which you may need to design or redesign a part-time role:

1. For existing part-timers – particularly those with caring responsibilities or health conditions intensified by the current situation
2. In response to requests from team members to temporarily reduce their hours in order to manage current commitments or health issues
3. As a result of a need to decrease payroll costs by asking team members to reduce their hours
4. In response to requests from new recruits or people returning from maternity or sick leave

Part-time job design is an art in itself. But at its simplest level, you should start by assessing whether you can reduce the work, or identify alternative resource, or do both.

You should also consider these five points:
- Review the whole team’s workload. Are you able to redistribute key activities, in line with capacity?
- Remember to adjust team members’ objectives in line with their new working hours.
- Share everyone’s preferred working patterns and discuss as a team how to make it work, using our Flexible Team Talk Template (in Section 7).
- Encourage team members to communicate availability and alternative contacts to key stakeholders.
- Make sure you still include time in the working day for team connection and personal development.

PLANNING FOR THE LONGER TERM
As it is likely that the need for reduced hours will continue, you will need to think strategically about:
- How flexible you can be in the longer term around how much people work.
- Reaching out to your team to understand their future needs and appetite for flexible working.
- Building resilience across teams and the wider organisation so staff can support and cover each other.
- Creating opportunities for development projects and career progression for part-timers.
- Integrating flex into people processes; recruitment, performance management, succession planning.

REDUCE WORKLOAD
What is the workload right now?
Has it been affected by the current situation?
Can any activities be stopped?
Can deadlines / deliverables be reduced / delayed?

FIND ALTERNATIVE RESOURCE
Can any work be moved – delegated to a team member, peer or manager?
Could a job share or job split be formed? Is there anyone else in scope?

To find out more about our flexible working workshops email info@timewise.co.uk
7. Line Manager Tool: Flexible Working Team Talk Template

The best way to consider flexible working is across a team. This means getting individuals involved in the best ways to deliver the team’s work whilst also supporting each other’s working patterns and preferences.

This tool offers a structure for discussing this with your team, and planning for the months ahead (when you may still need to work largely from home or use the office differently). You could run it as one longer session or two shorter ones.

EXERCISE 1

AIM

• To identify the benefits of building on our flexible working best practice

• To identify any barriers to continuing to work flexibly in our team

• To build on the benefits and minimise the barriers

10 mins on benefits
What are the benefits of building on our flexible working practices?
What has gone well in the past few weeks? What practices should we keep?

10 mins on barriers
What have been the barriers to effective flexible working during this time? What activities have we been unable to undertake effectively from home?

15 mins building on the benefits and overcoming barriers
How can we build on the benefits we have identified?
How can we overcome some of the barriers? What actions should we take?
Finish by summarising agreed actions.

EXERCISE 2

AIM

• To agree how we will work flexibly together in the coming months

• To capture this as a set of Flexible Working Protocols

What working patterns do we have in our team?
What are our key client / stakeholder meetings and deadlines?
How often and when do we want to meet as a team?
How can we ensure people are in the office when needed?
How will we make sure those working remotely are fully included?
What obstacles will we encounter?
What should we do next to embed these Flexible Working Protocols?
Finish by capturing your Flexible Working Protocols and agreeing how you will review them and keep them live.
8. Leadership in action: how to manage a flexible team

The advice in this guide will help you to discuss and design flexible jobs which support both individuals and your organisation. However, your role as a manager is a critical part of making flexibility work in practice.

Here are our eight core principles for successful flexible leadership:

• Lead by example. Be open about your own flexibility and how you’re managing your well-being. Book out space in your own diary for family time or breaks. Log off visibly and be clear that you don’t expect replies out of hours.

• Trust people to do their jobs on a flexible basis. Don’t wait for them to ‘earn it’.

• Be accessible. Let your team know they should contact you if they need support. Create spaces in your diary where they can catch up with you outside of a formal meeting.

• Consciously reward and recognise people for the outcomes they are achieving – not for working additional hours or being always present. This can unconsciously reinforce certain behaviours.

• Be upfront about what priorities will shift or stop if budgets and resources shrink further.

• Drive the conversation on flexible working. Bring it up with people in 1-2-1s, at end of year, during recruitment conversations. Even if the individual doesn’t want to work flexibly right now, mentioning it proactively will say a lot about how your team works.

• Consider flexible working options when you are advertising vacancies. If you can, be clear about the types of flexibility that would work well in the role.

• Talk to other teams about what you’re doing. Share your good practice and learn from theirs.

What’s next?

We hope that this guide has inspired you to embrace greater flexible working in your team. If you need further support to progress this agenda across your organisation, we’d love to help.
Further reading

- Timewise research highlighting the demand for flex working (pre-Covid-19)
  https://timewise.co.uk/article/flexible-working-talent-imperative/
- Survey looking at the impact of the current remote working experiment https://hoxby.com/blog/covid-19-remote-working-survey-results
- Survey exploring the attitudes of employees who rarely worked remotely before Covid-19:
  https://www.personneltoday.com/hr/remote-working-after-covid-19-coronavirus/
- Survey of HR managers covering the impact of Covid-19 on businesses and their people
- Guide for workforce considerations returning to the workplace
  https://www.cipd.co.uk/knowledge/fundamentals/emp-law/employees/workplace-guide-returning-after-coronavirus
- Scottish government guidance on home working
- Employer support to develop more flexible workplaces
  https://www.flexibilityworks.org/